FOREWORD

Modern warfare takes a great toll on cultural property as well as human life. Currently, the world is witnessing numerous revivals of ethnic, religious, and tribal strife, often signalled by the deliberate demolition of buildings and other symbolically-rich markers of group identity and national heritage.

Although concern for inanimate objects can appear callous when human lives are being lost, the destruction or theft of cultural markers is an important issue, for such violation of cultural markers is a conscious or unconscious negation of the people involved. This is true not only of wartime destruction and theft, but of peacetime trafficking in illegal antiquities and other cultural property. Where artistically important artifacts are concerned, their illicit excavation, smuggling, and trade are often "justified" by rationalizations such as: the country of origin does not appreciate them; they would be neglected if left there and would be better curated elsewhere; on display abroad they will enhance interest in the archaeology and culture of the area from which they came; they belong not to one country but to all countries and it is therefore permissible to buy them, even if stolen. The most recent justification for a privately-held collection of antiquities, now housed in its own museum, is that it is composed of "bought" objects that were "intercepted" in the international antiquities market.

For more than twenty years, very few nations, especially in the Near East, have allowed the trade in and export of antiquities. Therefore, Near Eastern artifacts that have entered private hands or museum collections during the past two decades must be viewed with suspicion. Admittedly, there are legal bequests and purchases of materials that have been in private hands for many years. But the burden of proof as to provenience of objects rests on the collectors and museums.

The present publication is designed to aid in the recovery of antiquities stolen from Iraq's regional museums during the insurrection following the Gulf War, 1991. Museums in Amara, Basra, Kufa, Diwaniya, Suleimaniya, Dohuk, and Kirkuk were vandalized, cases were smashed, and records were scattered. Some objects were left broken on the floors. Many others were smuggled out of Iraq and are finding their way to antiquities dealers in Europe and the U.S. In September of 1991, Dr. Moayyad Sa'id Damirji, the Iraqi Director of Antiquities, hand-carried a preliminary list of more than 2,000 stolen items to UNESCO in Paris. He requested that the list be disseminated to international police agencies, in accordance with international agreements. The document was distributed finally in March, 1992. The Department of Antiquities is still working to compile a complete list (perhaps as many as 4,000 items) accompanied by photos and details of provenience.
During the Gulf Crisis, the Iraqi Department of Antiquities acted in accordance with the Geneva and Hague conventions in its treatment of the Kuwait Museum collection. In the fall of 1990, the Director of Antiquities informed UNESCO that the collection was in imminent danger and that he would send museum personnel to Kuwait to transfer the collection to Baghdad for safekeeping. When the Iraq Museum staff members arrived in Kuwait, they found the objects and displays intact. The objects were catalogued, photographed, carefully wrapped, boxed, crated, and then transported by truck to Baghdad. At the Iraq Museum, storage space was made available by moving hundreds of Iraqi artifacts to the Mosul, Hatra, and Kirkuk museums. Throughout the war, the Kuwait collection remained untouched. Ironically, those Iraqi artifacts that had been sent to Kirkuk for safe-keeping were among the 2,000 items damaged or stolen from that city's archaeological and ethnographic museums.

At the end of the fighting, the Iraqi Department of Antiquities informed UNESCO that it was ready to return the Kuwait Museum collection. UNESCO, however, was unable to act as an intermediary. Apparently, UNESCO action in this matter was precluded as a side-effect of U.S.-British vetoes of two proposals to send UNESCO specialists (accompanied by an international group of Mesopotamian archaeologists) to assess cultural damage in the war zone. Through UNIMOG, the peacekeeping force on the Iran-Iraq border, the U.N. did provide overseers during the inspection, listing, and turning over of the collection. Kuwait's representatives had arrived in Baghdad with a list of 2,500 objects. The Iraqis returned 25,000 items, including not just the famous Islamic collection, but also the records of the Museum and the artifacts and archaeological records of sites such as Failaka. International media coverage of the return of the collection, which took place during September and October of 1991, has lagged months behind the event, allowing for belated claims that "Iraq has not yet returned the stolen antiquities of Kuwait." The actions of the Iraqi Department of Antiquities in regard to the Kuwait Museum collection were, in fact, correct and even exemplary. This all-too-rare compliance with international agreements on the safe-guarding and return of cultural property should be acknowledged.

In March, 1992, the American Association for Research in Baghdad\(^1\) received a copy of the preliminary list of stolen Iraqi objects. As a service to the Iraqi people, to the Department of Antiquities, and to the fields of Ancient Mesopotamian and Iraqi studies, the Association's board has decided to publish and distribute one or more fascicles devoted to those objects that can be identified through currently available documentation. The present fascicle is composed of more than 200 items, some of which are major, even

\(^1\)The American Association for Research in Baghdad is a not-for-profit organization, incorporated in 1989 by a consortium of American universities and museums. The Association has been formed to encourage and facilitate research in and on Iraq. Until the Gulf Crisis occurred, the Association was making progress in raising private, corporate, and governmental funds to establish a residence with a library in Baghdad, to support fellowships in a broad range of disciplines, and to initiate a publications program. While awaiting the opportunity to establish the facility in Baghdad, the Association has begun to carry out its publications program by preparing this catalogue and a forthcoming volume on a century of American scholarly activity in Iraq.
famous, pieces of ancient art. Many of the artifacts on the list are from excavations carried out by American expeditions, including those from the University of Chicago, the University of Pennsylvania, Harvard University, and the Field Museum. Because some of the items have already been published, or because we have access to expedition records, we can identify them in detail. Often, the xeroxed photographs on the Iraqi list or some other bit of information has allowed us to track items to their original field negatives, and thus we are able to produce unpublished photos. In many instances, we have the Iraq Museum number and a field number, from the time of excavation, but no photo. But in some cases, we know only that an item is from a specific site; we publish those artifacts here, hoping that the description may suffice to identify it. In a few cases, such as cylinder seals, where there are photos but no excavated provenience, we have had to resort to publishing the xeroxed photo. The quality of many of the illustrations, especially those from photocopies, is not very good, but we think that it is important to publish as quickly as possible. We know that scholars will be able to make identifications even from poor-quality photos. We hope that readers of this publication will be able to furnish information on specific items in this catalogue, by matching IM numbers with excavation numbers and supplying publication data or unpublished photos. Any additional information will be included in forthcoming fascicles. We are proceeding to enter all items on the Iraqi list into a DBase program, and eventually will be able to furnish a computer disc at cost to any interested party.

As additional data are furnished by the Department of Antiquities, the Association will publish other fascicles devoted to the remaining items on the list. It should be mentioned that, besides what is in this fascicle, the list includes dozens more cylinder seals, ivories, and cuneiform tablets, hundreds of gold or silver coins, major examples of Islamic metalwork, and other important categories of material. It is clear that the losses from the regional museums were major ones. The second fascicle will probably feature Islamic items that are not usually given an excavated provenience in the Iraqi list, but are represented in photocopies and thus could be recognized.

The antiquities published here, as well as all others on the Iraqi list, are stolen goods, are not legally held, and can be recovered through police action. They are also included under terms of the current embargo of Iraq; their import is illegal under the laws of the U.S.A. and other adherents to the U.N. boycott. Anyone who encounters any of the objects in this fascicle, or any other items that are recognizable as from Iraq’s museums, should make contact with one of the following:

Acknowledgments

The catalogue presented here has been compiled in a DBase format by Augusta McMahon, following hours of research in publications and excavation records. She has also prepared the layout. We would like to thank John C. Sanders, Thomas Holland, Thomas Urban, Donald P. Hansen, Karen Wilson, and Rose Diamond for their advice. Selma al-Radi supplied us with the copy of the Iraqi list in March, 1992.

Illustrations have been created by copying field negatives, by photographing plates in books, or copying the photcopies in the Iraqi list. We publish illustrations with the permission of the following institutions or persons.

Note on the Catalogue

The catalogue is organized alphabetically by Type of Object (OBJ), Material (MAT), Provenience, i.e., site where found (PRO), Excavation Field Number (FN), Iraq Museum Number (IM), Local Museum Number (LM), Period (PER), and Description and publication information.

The Local Museums are listed as follows:
- Basra (Archaeological and Ethnographic collections)
- Dohuk
- Kirkuk (Archaeological and Ethnographic collections)
- Kufa
- Misan (=Amara)
- Qad (=Qadissiyah=Diwaniyah)
- Sul (=Suleimaniya)

Periods are listed as follows:
- Uruk
- JN  Jemdet Nasr (3100-2900 B.C.)
- ED  Early Dynastic (c. 2900-2350 B.C.)
- AKK Akkadian (c. 2350-2100 B.C.)
- Ur III Ur III (c. 2100-2000 B.C.)
- OB Old Babylonian (1800-1600 B.C.)
- KAS Kassite (1600-1250 B.C.)
- NA Neo-Assyrian (911-626 B.C.)
- NB Neo-Babylonian (626-539 B.C.)
- Parth Parthian (126 B.C.-227 A.D.)

Please note: the illustrations in the catalogue are not to any particular scale. Measurements are given in the text.

Cylinder seals are not actually shown, but are represented by modern impressions made from them. In a few cases, stamp seals are shown both as objects and impressions. Usually only one view of an object is shown, but some items are shown from multiple angles. Cuneiform tablets are usually shown only on the obverse side. Unless otherwise noted, the photographs are of casts of tablets, not of the originals.
